What's the spread between invoice price and retail price?

Unfortunately, the simple answer is: It depends. In many cases, it depends on the total price of the vehicle. A small car such as the Toyota Corolla or Mazda3, for example, will have a fairly small profit margin between invoice and retail price – often 5 percent or less. A more expensive luxury car can have a much higher profit margin, sometimes stretching well beyond 10 percent and into even higher territory.
